THE RISING TIDE OF REVOLUTION IN NORTH CAROLINA, 1774-1776

Author: Dr. Jeffrey J. Crow

Until 1774 revolutionary ferment in North Carolina was often related to local issues. To be sure, North Carolina had acted in concert with other colonies in opposing the Stamp Act and Townshend Duties of the 1760's when Great Britain had attempted to tax its American provinces. But in the intervening years local problems such as the War of the Regulation (1768-1771) and continued clashes between the royal governor and the General Assembly had increasingly absorbed the attention and energies of North Carolinians. In 1774, however, local and colonial-wide issues came together dramatically to thrust North Carolina into the rising tide of revolution.

In North Carolina the Revolution was nurtured and executed by a close-knit and long-entrenched provincial ruling class of planters, merchants, and professional men. These whigs, as they were known, were strongest and most active in the Lower Cape Fear country. They sought independence from Great Britain not to radicalize or revolutionize the social or even political structure of the colony but to maintain their right to manage colonial affairs as they saw fit. In so doing, coercion and terror as well as shrewd propaganda set the stage for the armed rebellion which would come in 1775.

In 1774 the whigs were by no means in the majority. Besides the Cape Fear country, their strength lay in the tidewater areas pushing inland from New Bern and the Albemarle Sound as well as in the western Piedmont counties of Mecklenburg and Rowan. Settled by Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, the Piedmont rippled with opposition to the established and publicly supported Anglican church which royal Governors William Tryon and Josiah Martin had conspicuously promoted in recent years.

The rest of the colony might well have been considered loyal to the crown or at least neutral. German Moravians and Quakers were pacifists who refused to take sides during the long conflict with the mother country. Scottish Highlanders who had immigrated to North Carolina in the previous decade staunchly aligned themselves with the crown. The regulators who had been crushed by the colonial militia at the Battle of Alamance in 1771 were an unknown factor. Other North Carolinians remained loyal simply because they were conservative and preferred good order, felt bonds to the Anglican church, maintained important commercial ties with England, or served as royal office-holders.

The revolutionary movement in North Carolina accelerated when the British Parliament, in retaliation for the Boston Tea Party, adopted the Coercive Acts which among other things closed the port of Boston on June 1, 1774. Committees of correspondence quickly spread the news throughout the colonies. The North Carolina Committee of Correspondence read like a roster of the "revolutionary high command," in the words of one historian, and included Cornelius Harnett, Samuel Johnston, Robert Howe, William Hooper, Richard Caswell, John Ashe, and Joseph Hewes. Wilmington patriots declared the "cause of Boston" to be the "common cause of British America".

As cries for a general congress of all the colonies rang across the continent, the First Provincial Congress in North Carolina met at New Bern in August, 1774. The provincial congress was extralegal, for it had been called in defiance of royal authority. The New Bern Congress named three delegates to the First Continental Congress, drew up a non-importation association, and authorized the formation of committees of safety in each county. These revolutionary institutions were to enforce the association and in effect become the local arm of government. Committees of correspondence, the provincial congress, and committees of safety thus laid the foundation of an extralegal and revolutionary government usurping royal authority.

The most active committees of safety were in whig strongholds like Wilmington, New Bern, and Rowan County in the backcountry. The committees enforced the non-importation association, raised provisions to send to Boston's beleaguered patriots, banned profiteering and price-gouging by merchants as commodities became scarce, and discouraged less serious activities like horseracing, billiards, and society balls.

By the spring of 1775 the whigs held firm control of the three most important coastal towns and several strategic backcountry counties. The Second Provincial Congress that met in April at the same time as the lawful General Assembly illustrated the audacity and strength of the revolutionaries. The two bodies were nearly identical in composition; indeed, the assembly invited the extralegal provincial congress to unite with it, and so the two conventions became one. Governor Josiah Martin repudiated both bodies which in turn denounced him. Though the governor dissolved the assembly, the provincial congress continued to meet. Besides reappointing three delegates to the Continental Congress, it established a Council of Safety to oversee the colony's affairs and to supervise the committees of safety.

News of the battle at Lexington and Concord, Massachusetts, reached North Carolina around the first of May and sent tremors through the province. "The Sword is now drawn," announced the whig leadership, "and God knows when it will be sheathed." Once moderate whigs who still sought conciliation with the mother country fell in line behind the radical whigs and girded themselves for sterner actions. Committees of safety sprang up in loyalist-dominated counties like Anson, Cumberland, and Surry. The committees ruthlessly forced citizens to support the non-importation association and to pledge allegiance to the revolutionary government that was now superseding royal rule. Militia began drilling. Janet Schaw, a Scottish gentlewoman who was visiting the Lower Cape Fear country, provided in her journal a revealing insight into how revolutions are made:

At present the martial law stands thus: an officer or committeeman enters a plantation with his posse. The Alternative is proposed, Agree to join us and your persons and property are safe; you have a shilling sterling a day; your duty is no more than once a month appearing under Arms at Wilmington which will prove only a merrymaking, where you will have as much grog as you can drink. But if you refuse, we are directly to cut up your corn, shoot your pigs, burn your houses, seize your Negroes and perhaps tar and feather yourself.

In Anson County where the loyalists perhaps remained in the majority, the whigs conducted a virtual reign of terror. One loyalist was approached "in a violent manner" and called a "damned scoundrel" who ought to be killed. He was later arrested by the whigs and then released after several days of whig indoctrination. But he was again set upon by a mob of whigs who began stripping off his clothes and threatening to kill him before finally freeing him.

The menacing behavior of the whigs had its effect on the royal governor too. Ensnared in Tryon Palace at New Bern, Governor Martin attempted to hide the palace cannon in a cabbage patch. But a "motley mob" of patriots, purportedly stimulated by liquor according to the royal governor, seized the cannon anyhow. That was too much for Martin. Sending his pregnant wife to New York, the frightened governor fled the palace on May 31, 1775, and made his way to Fort Johnston at the mouth of the Cape Fear. North Carolina thus became the first colony to expel its royal governor.

Martin's respite at Fort Johnston proved brief. Shortly after he fled to the British sloop Cruizer, Wilmington's committee of safety organized an attack on the fort and burned it to the ground. In his famous "Fiery Proclamation," Martin denounced the committees of safety as "evil, pernicious and traitorous" and their leaders as "atrocious". With the Third Provincial Congress preparing to convene at Hillsborough in August, 1775, Martin warned that the seditious congress could "bring the Affairs of this Country to a Crisis".

Every town and county was represented at the Hillsborough Congress. Still worried about potential loyalist strength, the congress sent delegations to confer with the Scots Highlanders and regulators. More importantly, the convention declared that henceforth North Carolinians were bound by the acts and resolutions of the Continental and Provincial congresses. The colony was divided into six military districts, and the formation of two regiments of 500 men each for the Continental Line was authorized. The Council of Safety continued to assume control of the colony's affairs, while local government continued to reside with the safety committees. Royal rule was dead in North Carolina.

Governor Martin nonetheless believed firmly that most North Carolinians remained loyal to the crown. As he explained the loyalists' plight, "For the preservation of their persons from insult, and their property from confiscation, (the loyalists) must indignantly and reluctantly yield to the overbearing current of revolt".

Martin devised an ambitious plan by which he expected to crush the whig rebellion. In January, 1776, he issued a proclamation calling on the king's "faithful subjects" to rally to the royal standard, and he empowered tory leaders to raise an army to march to Brunswick. Martin planned to raise an indigenous army of 9,000 loyalists - mostly Scottish Highlanders - to rendezvous with three British military units under Lord Charles Cornwallis, Sir Henry Clinton, and Sir Peter Parker no later than February 15, 1776.

The stage was thus set for the Battle of Moore's Creek Bridge. The whigs called out militia units from Dobbs, Johnston, Pitt, and Craven counties. Wilmington was put under martial law and twenty suspected tories seized and detained. By mid-February a formidable force of some 1,600 Highland Scots had reached Cross Creek on their march to the coast. Colonel James Moore of the Continental Line adroitly deployed his forces, numbering perhaps 1,100, at Moore's Creek Bridge under the immediate command of Richard Caswell and Alexander Lillington. On the morning of February 27, 1776, the whig and tory armies clashed in a short but brutally decisive engagement. The whigs had removed the planks from the bridge and greased the log sleepers with soap and tallow. As the Highlanders tried to cross the sabotaged bridge, they were raked by a murderous fusillade. The tories suffered fifty wounded and killed in a battle that lasted only three minutes. The whigs had one killed and one wounded.

The Battle of Moore's Creek Bridge was crucial, for it frustrated British plans to invade North Carolina and the South. When the British forces finally arrived off Brunswick in May, 1776, they found no loyalist army to greet them and only a dyspeptic Governor Martin.

The most important result of the battle was the impetus it gave for calling the Fourth Provincial Congress which assembled at Halifax in April. That congress adopted the famous Halifax Resolves which instructed North Carolina's delegates to the Continental Congress to concur in any movement for independence. North Carolina was the first colony to urge such a course officially. On May 27, 1776, delegates from North Carolina and Virginia recommended that the Continental Congress declare independence from Great Britain. The upshot of that initiative was the Declaration of Independence. When word of it reached North Carolina, the Council of Safety passed a resolution absolving North Carolina of "all Allegiance to the British Crown". And on August 1, 1776, Cornelius Harnett, president of the council, read the Declaration for the first time publicly in North Carolina at Halifax.

These developments underscored the urgency of forming a new state government and drafting a constitution. On this issue the whigs, who had proved so cohesive in the movement toward independence, were badly divided. A conservative faction desired a government that differed little from its royal predecessor--a strong executive, an independent judiciary appointed with life tenure, and stiff property qualifications which tended to limit suffrage and office-holding. As Samuel Johnston of Edenton put it, he had no faith in "numbers". The so-called radical faction, on the other hand, stood for what they described as a "simple democracy" with a strong legislature, weak executive and religious freedom from an established church. During the election campaign for the Fifth Provincial Congress which would draft the constitution, acrimony and bitterness marked the political debate. Johnston was hanged in effigy and defeated at the polls. He sourly complained that the government would now be run by a "set of men without reading, experience, or principles to govern them".

Despite such alarms, the Fifth Provincial Congress which met in November, 1776, formulated a bill of rights, drafted a state constitution, and established North Carolina's first state government. The new constitution definitely had democratic features which had grown out of the colonial experience. Most importantly, power had shifted away from the executive and to the legislature. The governor was elected every year by the legislature, but he could not call elections, summon, prorogue, or dissolve the legislature, or veto legislation. While there were property qualifications for suffrage and officeholding, any freeman--white or black--could vote if he held land or paid public taxes.

A revolution had been made and a new government launched as Richard Caswell assumed his duties as the state's first governor. Revolutionary institutions like committees of safety, the provincial congress, and the Council of Safety had grasped increasing control of governmental affairs since 1774. An aggressive whig program of propaganda, coercion, intimidation, and violence had been employed to thrust North Carolina into the revolutionary current and to quell pervasive and persistent loyalism. Peace, however, was still seven long years away. And, as some perceptive observers noted, the American Revolution had scarcely begun in 1776.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION

North Carolina is within 500 miles of over half the population of the United States. With a population of over 5.2 million and ranking 11th in the nation in value added by manufacture, the state has developed rapidly as a leader in consumer and industrial products consumption. Other factors cited: an excellent business climate; an AAA rating in the nation's bond markets; a network of nationally known colleges and universities, plus a statewide system of technical institutes, one of which is located in Roxboro; a comparatively low per capita debt; labor easy to train and willing to work; favorable labor-management relations; a state law which prohibits deficit spending; good government at both state and local levels; and a nationally known highway system of primary and secondary roads; A wide variety of scenic, recreational, and cultural attractions add greatly to livability in North Carolina.

PHYSICAL ASSETS

Location and History

The town of Roxborough was chartered in 1791. The town was named for Roxborough, Scotland and was founded when the temporary seat of the county was moved from Paines' Tavern. The name Roxborough was changed to Roxboro in 1833.

The city of Roxboro is the county seat for Person County and the only incorporated town in Person County. Roxboro is 30 miles north of Durham and 55 miles northwest of Raleigh. The neighboring counties that join Person County are Caswell, Durham, Granville, and Orange County. Roxboro is approximately 15 miles from the North Carolina-Virginia border at the geographical center of the county.

After the Civil War, Roxboro's population increased substantially because of the highway network and construction of a railroad by Norfolk & Western from Durham through Roxboro to South Boston, Virginia. According to the census of 1970, Roxboro has approximately 6,775 people and Person County's population is 25,914.

Roxboro is the trade center for Person County and has a diversified economy based on agriculture, industry, and trade.

Physiography

Roxboro lies in the Piedmont section of North Carolina. The terrain around the city generally is rolling and the mean elevation of the community is 671 feet above sea level.

NATURAL RESOURCES

Located within the Piedmont province in north-central North Carolina, Person County lies on rolling land that lends itself naturally to beauty. Elevation above sea level ranges from a high of about 800 feet in several locations to a low of about 320 feet. The general slope of the land faces northeastward, the dividing ridge beginning in the extreme southwestern corner extending northeastward to Roxboro, and thence eastward to the Granville County line. Person County headwaters the Neuse, Roanoke, and the Tar-Pamlico River Basins.

Of a total 256,640 acres of land in the county, about 85 percent is used for agricultural purposes. The soil is well suited to support an agricultural economy. Farm crops harvested include tobacco, corn, sorghum, wheat, oats, barley, soybeans, mixed small grains, hay, and vegetables.

Livestock production including beef, dairy, pork, and poultry continues to produce a significant income for county farmers.

Land in Person County is still an abundant resource and can be adapted for many industrial uses.

Water Supply

The city of Roxboro obtains raw water from a 230 acre lake (rated yield 4 MGD) plus a back-up system from Hyco River of 2.25 MGD—current excess is rated at 1.45 MGD. The city has a proposed contract award date in August, 1975 for a new 650-acre lake with a yield projected of 8 MGD. This substantial increase in excess will provide for excellent long-term industrial growth.

Water Plant System

The present Roxboro Water Treatment plant has a filter capacity of 4.0 MGD which contrasted to average annual consumption of 3.8 MGD leaves an excess of .2 MGD. This tight situation is being corrected by expansion of water treatment to a total of 8 MGD in order to provide for long-term growth. The financing and start of this expansion are in the final stages of preparation.

Wastewater Treatment

The Roxboro Wastewater Treatment Plant has a capacity of 4 MGD. The plant is Class III. Secondary Treatment with extended aeration has current excess rated at .7 MGD. Planned expansion will increase total capacity to 6 MGD thereby providing growth from the large increase in excess capacity.

Piedmont Technical Institute has begun the initial stage of building a new educational facility on its 170-acre tract of land at an estimated cost of 3.5 to 5 million dollars. The new campus fulfills a mission by this post-secondary institution to provide occupational and academic training programs both now and in the future for the citizenry of Roxboro and Person County.

Piedmont Tech was established by law for the purpose of providing skilled manpower training through occupational programs for those adults whose employment in new or expanding industries requires a technical knowledge of performance. This unique and professional operation is geared to the needs of new industries who plan to locate in Roxboro or Person County as well as present industries who plan to expand or change their method of production. The educational benefits to the people it serves also include an opportunity for young women and men to compare the first two years of college in related academic studies for transfer to one or more of the 21 senior colleges and universities in North Carolina who accept the College Transfer Program.

County government officials and voters of Person County have registered strong support for Piedmont Technical Institute as evidenced by approval in 1974 of a $2,500,000 bond issue to provide land and facilities for this growing institution.

Additionally, there are several medical office buildings where private physicians, surgeons, dentists, optometrists, and chiropractors practice their healing arts. All of these facilities are conveniently located in suburban areas surrounding downtown Roxboro, and plenty of free parking is always available. In addition to the facilities in Roxboro, there are medical centers nearby in Durham and Chapel Hill which offer more specialized medical services when these are required. These facilities are about a 30 to 45 minute drive from Roxboro and include internationally famous Duke University Hospital. The Public Health Department of North Carolina maintains a modern office in Roxboro.

PERSON COUNTY MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

DOCTOR'S CLINIC

DOCTOR'S CLINIC

The Person County Memorial Hospital is a well-equipped, small general hospital offering a broad range of services including medical and surgical care, obstetrical facilities, coronary and intensive care, and 24-hour emergency service as well as a breadth of diagnostic and rehabilitative service such as a laboratory and x-ray, electrocardiography, physical therapy, respiratory therapy, and complete pharmaceutical service. In addition to acute hospital care, long-term care is available in the Reginald Harris Annex Skilled Nursing Facility which is attached to the hospital. The general hospital has a total of 65 beds and the Skilled Nursing Facility contains 23 beds. The home for the aged has accommodation for 34 residents.

Rescue and transportation for patients in emergency situations is available to all citizens at no cost from the Person County Rescue Squad. This self-sponsored volunteer organization has a well-trained group of about 30 emergency medical technicians (EMT's) and is equipped to handle aquatic rescue as well as all types of emergencies which occur on land. There is also a private ambulance service offering both emergency and routine transportation services at reasonable rates.

As the population of the area grows, so will the need for medical services grow. The Chamber of Commerce in cooperation with the Hospital Administration has established a current program of recruitment to meet the needs for professional medical skills not now in residence.

In addition to the facilities for the health and medical needs of people, there is a modern, well-equipped veterinary clinic which provides services for farm animals and all types of pets.

Recreation

The Person County Department of Parks and Recreation offers a well-rounded program of leisure time activities for all ages. Included in the programs are football, basketball, baseball, and softball leagues. Senior citizens enjoy a special club with trips and events available.

Volleyball is a popular program for both men and women. Women's leagues exist in all programs with the exception of football and baseball.

The Recreation Department greatly expands its offerings during the summer months with a full-staffed playground program at selected locations. Included are arts and crafts, tennis, dances, dramatics, and other special events. Also included in the summer program are a swimming and developmental disabled program. Gymnasiums are open for free play throughout the year whenever available.

The Recreation Department also operates an indoor theatre seating 1,000 people. Weekend movies at nominal charges are shown and the county-owned building is available to other local clubs, singing groups, etc. There is an outdoor, privately owned theatre in the county also.

A semi-private 18-hole golf course plus a private membership country club with a swimming pool and tennis courts are available. Lots for residential homes adjacent to the golf course are for sale.

There are a number of hunting and fishing clubs in the city and county. The climate enables sportsmen to enjoy outdoor activities the year round. For horseback riders and showmen, there are two saddle clubs operated by their members.

Carolina Power & Light Company Lake, an exceptionally clean 3,750-acre body of water in Person County, offers all types of water activities — boating, fishing, skiing, camping, picnicking, and swimming. A 65-acre recreation park is open to the public and is, like the entire lake, controlled by the Person-Caswell Lake Authority.

The Roxboro Optimist Club Park offers a semi-pro baseball league and other sporting events to the public.

How To Get Along With People

Keep skid chains on your tongue;
 always say less than you think;
 cultivate a low, persuasive voice.
 Make promises sparingly and keep them faithfully, no matter what it costs you. Praise good work done, regardless of who did it.
 If criticism is merited,
 criticize helpfully, never spitefully.
 Preserve an open mind on all debatable questions.
 Discuss but don't argue.
 It is a mark of superior minds to disagree and yet be friendly.
